President Garfield MacVeigh stated, "The Company has worked hard to reduce overhead and leverage the value of its exploration assets during the past two years, and its efforts have paid off. Constantine has significantly more cash in the bank now than it did three years ago when it ended the year with $126,000, and it has done so without equity cash infusions. Furthermore, the Company is projecting that it will have sufficient working capital to meet its operating requirements for the next fiscal year, while completing another major exploration program on its flagship Palmer project."
